MODULE 01

Positioning: Standing Out in a Crowded Niche

Every coaching niche looks saturated from the outside. It isn't. What's saturated is generic positioning — the same five phrases repeated by everyone selling transformation. This module gets your positioning specific enough that the right client reads your bio and feels like you wrote it about them.

Why "I help people achieve their goals" doesn't work

That sentence describes every coach on the planet. It gives a stranger nothing to grab onto — no proof you understand their specific version of stuck, no reason to pick you over the next profile they scroll past.

Specificity isn't limiting. It's the opposite. A narrower promise to the right person converts better than a broad promise to everyone, because the right person recognizes themselves immediately instead of having to guess if you're for them.

The three-part positioning formula

Who exactly you help, what specific result you get them, and what makes your approach different from the obvious alternative. All three, every time — drop any one and the positioning goes soft.

Example shift: "I coach professionals" becomes "I help burned-out mid-career professionals build a business that doesn't require choosing between income and their evenings." Same coach, same skill set, completely different pull.

Finding your specific angle without a rebrand

You don't need new credentials to get more specific. You need to look at your last ten clients and find the pattern — the thing three or more of them had in common that you haven't been saying out loud.

That pattern is usually more interesting than whatever generic niche you started with. It's also usually something you've been undervaluing because it feels too obvious to you.

Action Steps — Before You Move On

- ☐ Write down the last five clients you actually enjoyed working with, and one sentence on what they had in common.
- ☐ Draft one sentence using the three-part formula: who, what result, what's different.
- ☐ Update your bio on one platform with the new positioning this week, not "eventually."

MODULE 02

Content Strategy: What to Post and Why

Most coaches post whatever feels inspiring that day. That's not a strategy, it's a mood. This module gives you a repeatable framework so every post has a job to do — either building trust, proving results, or moving someone closer to booking a call.

The three jobs every post should do

Every piece of content should build trust, prove results, or create urgency to act. If a post doesn't clearly do one of these three things, it's filler — and filler is why accounts with decent engagement still don't convert to clients.

You don't need to hit all three in one post. You need to know, before you write it, which job this specific post is doing.

Building trust without oversharing

Trust-building content isn't your whole life story. It's a specific belief, method, or mistake explained clearly enough that a stranger thinks "this person actually knows what they're talking about."

The fastest way to build trust fast is teaching one small, specific thing extremely well — not a broad overview of your whole philosophy.

Proof content that doesn't feel like bragging

Client wins land better as stories than as stats. "She lost the fear of raising her prices" beats "increased revenue 40%" almost every time, because the story is what a prospect actually pictures happening to them.

Always get explicit permission before posting client details, even anonymized ones. It costs you nothing and protects the relationship.

Action Steps — Before You Move On

- ☐ Look at your last 10 posts and label each one: trust, proof, or urgency. Note how many were actually none of the three.
- ☐ Write one trust-building post teaching a single specific belief or method, start to finish, today.
- ☐ Identify one past client win you can turn into a story-format post this week (with permission if needed).

Growth Tactics: Getting Seen by the Right People

Growth isn't about posting more. It's about getting your existing content in front of people who are actually a fit, faster. This module covers the tactics that move the needle without turning you into a full-time content machine.

Why chasing algorithms wastes your time

Algorithms change constantly and chasing them is a losing game for a solo coach with limited hours. What doesn't change is that specific, useful content performing well to a smaller audience beats vague content performing poorly to a large one.

Optimize for "would the right person stop scrolling and read this," not for whatever trend is working this week.

The comment-and-engage strategy that actually works

Spending 15 focused minutes a day leaving genuinely useful comments on posts where your ideal client already hangs out does more for visibility than most people expect — it's slow, unglamorous, and it compounds.

The comment has to add real value, not just "great post!" A thoughtful, specific comment gets profile clicks. A generic one gets ignored.

Collaborations that don't require a big following

You don't need 50,000 followers to collaborate. You need a complementary audience — someone serving the same client at a different stage or in a different way.

A simple guest appearance, swap, or joint live session with even a small, aligned audience usually outperforms weeks of solo posting.

Action Steps — Before You Move On

- ☐ Pick one platform where your ideal client already spends time and commit to 15 minutes of genuine engagement daily for one week.
- ☐ List three people or accounts with a complementary (not competing) audience you could reach out to about a collaboration.
- ☐ Send one collaboration outreach message this week.

MODULE 04

Converting Followers Into Clients

Followers don't pay invoices. This module is about the specific moves that turn someone who's been watching for months into someone who books a call — without you feeling like you're constantly selling.

Why most CTAs get ignored

"DM me to learn more" is vague and low-commitment, which means it's easy to scroll past. Specific CTAs — tied to a specific outcome, with a specific next step — convert dramatically better.

"DM me the word GROWTH if you're ready to stop guessing at your content" gives a stranger a clear, low-friction action tied directly to a problem they recognize.

The warm-up sequence before someone books

Almost nobody books a call from a single post. They watch for a while, build trust slowly, and then act when the timing lines up with a moment of real frustration or motivation.

Your job isn't to force that moment. It's to stay consistently visible and trustworthy so you're the obvious choice when it happens.

Handling objections before they're spoken

The three objections that kill most coaching sales are price, timing, and "will this actually work for me." Content that addresses these proactively — before a discovery call — makes the actual sales conversation dramatically shorter and easier.

You don't need a hard sales pitch if your content has already answered the objection days or weeks earlier.

Action Steps — Before You Move On

- ☐ Rewrite your last three CTAs to be specific and tied to one clear outcome.
- ☐ Write one piece of content addressing the single objection you hear most often on calls.
- ☐ Identify five people who've been engaging with your content for a while and send one genuinely helpful, no-pitch message to each this week.

MODULE 05

Systems & Consistency: Making It Sustainable

None of the previous four modules matter if you burn out after three weeks. This module is about building a content and outreach rhythm you can actually sustain alongside running your business.

Batching without losing your voice

Batch the structure — topics, hooks, formats — in one sitting, but write the actual words closer to posting when possible. This keeps the efficiency of batching without the flat, generic tone that comes from writing ten posts in a row on autopilot.

A simple content calendar with topics assigned to days removes 80% of the daily "what do I post today" friction.

The minimum viable weekly rhythm

You don't need to post daily to grow a coaching business. A sustainable minimum — a handful of intentional posts, some engagement time, and one direct outreach effort per week — done consistently for months, beats an aggressive schedule that collapses after three weeks.

Consistency compounds. Sporadic bursts of effort don't, no matter how good any single burst is.

Knowing when to step back and reassess

Every few months, revisit your positioning, your top-performing content, and your conversion rate. What worked when you started may need adjusting as your audience and offer evolve.

This isn't about constant pivoting. It's a scheduled checkpoint, not a reaction to every slow week.

Action Steps — Before You Move On

- ☐ Define your minimum viable weekly content and outreach rhythm — write it down as a real number, not an aspiration.
- ☐ Block time on your calendar this week for batching topics and hooks, even if the actual writing happens later.
- ☐ Set a recurring quarterly reminder to revisit positioning, top content, and conversion rate.
