

A FREE CASE STUDY

Behind the Vault: How a 5,330-Activity Library Got Built

A Free Resource from The Lazy Creator Co.

THE LAZY CREATOR CO.

Welcome

Hi, I'm Michael — the person behind The Lazy Creator Co. This is the real story behind the Activity Vault: the numbers, why it exists, and how a 20-year classroom career and a systems-building habit turned into a 5,330-activity library. No pitch, just what actually happened.

If you want to see the actual library this case study describes, the free demo is open — no email required.

THE NUMBERS

What Actually Shipped

The Activity Vault is 5,330 activities across five modules, each built for a different age group and setting — early childhood, camp and after-school, pre-teens, emotional regulation, and parents at home. One license covers all five.

Module	Activities	Built For
AdaptED	1,420	Early childhood educators & homeschool
CampED	1,031	Camp & after-school leaders
TeenagED	503	Pre-teens, ages 11–15
RegulatED	1,439	Emotional regulation, all ages
ParentED	363	Parents, written in Tatianna's voice

THE WHY

Why It Started

This one didn't start with me. It started with my wife, Tatianna — a Senior Childhood Educator with 20 years in early-childhood development, specializing in toddlers, in a senior-level role at the YMCA. She had two decades of real activities that actually work in a real classroom, and no practical way to package that knowledge for other educators to use.

I built the system to organize and deliver it. She's the educational lead on every module — especially ParentED, which is written directly in her voice, backed by the same 20 years the whole library is built on.

THE BUILD

How It Actually Got Organized

Five modules, each standing on its own instead of one undifferentiated pile of activities. AdaptED for early childhood educators and homeschool families. CampED for summer camp and after-school leaders. TeenagED for the 11–15 life-skills gap most curriculums skip. RegulatED for social-emotional and self-regulation work. ParentED for practical strategies at home.

The goal was never just volume. It was making sure someone in any one of those roles could find exactly what they needed without wading through activities meant for a completely different age group.

Key Takeaway

A library is only useful if the person using it can actually find what they need. Organization is half the product.

THE GIVE-BACK

It's Not Just a Sale

A portion of every purchase goes back through a give-back program supporting charities outside the business itself — because a library built by an educator, for educators, should give something back to the same kind of work it came from.

Try It Yourself

The Vault is one license, five modules, built by an actual Senior Childhood Educator with 20 years in the field. Try the free demo, or get full access.

Try the Demo

thelazycreatoractivityvault.netlify.app — free, no email required.

Buy the Vault

$67 individual license — or $397 for a full school license.

Find the whole collection at thelazycreatorcompany.com