Grow & Convert

for Restaurants & Cafes

A 5-module system for turning content into a full house of regulars

THELAZYCREATORCOMPANY.NETLIFY.APP

How to use this course

This course is written specifically for restaurants & cafes — not generic business advice. Each module builds on the last, moving from positioning to content to growth to conversion to systems. Work through it in order, and use the action steps at the end of every module before moving to the next.

- Work through the modules in order — each one builds on the last.
- Complete the Action Steps at the end of every module before moving to the next.
- This is a working document. Highlight, annotate, and revisit it as your content evolves.

MODULE 01

Positioning: Becoming the Place People Actually Talk About

Most restaurant accounts post the same plated-dish photos as every other spot in town. This module gets your positioning specific enough that when someone nearby is deciding where to eat, your name is the one they think of first.

Why "great food, great vibes" doesn't work

Every restaurant claims great food and great vibes. It's expected, not differentiating, which means it gives a hungry local no actual reason to pick you over the place next door.

What differentiates you is a specific dish you're known for, a specific atmosphere, or a specific kind of experience people can't easily get elsewhere nearby.

The three-part positioning formula for a restaurant

What you're specifically known for, who actually comes in and why, and what makes the experience different from the obvious alternative down the street.

Example shift: "casual dining, family-friendly" becomes "the neighborhood spot where regulars know the staff by name and the specials are never on the menu." Same kitchen, dramatically more specific pull.

Finding your angle from your actual regulars

Look at who keeps coming back and why. Is there a dish they always order, a time of day they show up, a reason they mention when they bring friends? That pattern is your real positioning.

Restaurants often lead with the full menu when what actually brings people back is one or two specific things done exceptionally well.

Action Steps — Before You Move On

- ☐ Ask three regulars why they keep coming back, and note any pattern in their answers.
- ☐ Draft one positioning sentence: what you're known for, who comes in, what's different.
- ☐ Update your bio on one platform with the sharper positioning this week.

Content Strategy: What to Post and Why

Most restaurant accounts post plated food photos on a loop. That's a start, but it's not a full strategy. This module gives you a repeatable framework so every post builds craving, shows real atmosphere, or moves someone toward walking in.

The three jobs every restaurant post should do

Every post should build craving, show real atmosphere, or create urgency to visit (a special, an event, limited availability). A plated dish photo with no context does none of these particularly well on its own.

Knowing which job a post is doing before you shoot it is the difference between an account that gets likes and one that actually fills tables.

Craving content: making people actually hungry

Close-up, process-focused content — the pour, the sizzle, the plating in motion — creates far more craving than a static, top-down plated photo, because it captures the sensory experience, not just the finished product.

Atmosphere content: showing the real experience

Behind-the-scenes moments — the kitchen during a rush, regulars laughing at the bar, the space at golden hour — do more to convince someone to visit than another polished food shot.

Always be genuine here. Overly staged "candid" content reads as fake and undercuts the trust you're trying to build.

Action Steps — Before You Move On

- ☐ Label your last 10 posts: craving, atmosphere, or urgency. Note how many were just static plated photos.
- ☐ Create one process-focused, close-up piece of content this week.
- ☐ Post one genuine behind-the-scenes moment showing the real atmosphere.

Growth Tactics: Getting Seen by the Right People

Growth for a restaurant is about local visibility, not follower count from strangers who will never actually visit. This module covers tactics that build recognition in your actual community.

Why hyper-local beats broad reach

A restaurant can only realistically serve people within a reasonable distance. Optimizing for local relevance — tagging your neighborhood, referencing local landmarks — matters more than broad reach that will never book a table.

The goal is a local scroller thinking "that's right around the corner," not impressive follower counts from people in another city.

The local community and food page engagement strategy

Genuinely engaging with local food bloggers, neighborhood pages, and community accounts builds visibility with the exact people who are actually deciding where to eat nearby tonight.

This has to be real engagement, not a drive-by plug. A comment that adds something genuinely useful gets noticed. A generic self-promotional comment gets ignored.

Local partnerships that don't cost anything

Nearby businesses, local event organizers, and community groups often welcome a genuine cross-promotion or partnership — catering a local event, a joint giveaway, a simple shoutout swap.

The best partnerships start with your restaurant offering something first, not asking for exposure before you've given any.

Action Steps — Before You Move On

- ☐ List three local food or community pages where your neighborhood is likely active.
- ☐ Identify one local business or event you could partner with this month.
- ☐ Reach out to one local partner this week with a specific, no-strings offer.

Converting Followers Into Walk-Ins

A local following doesn't automatically become a full dining room. This module covers the specific moves that turn someone who's been watching your content into someone who actually walks in the door.

Why vague CTAs get ignored

"Come try us out" is generic and easy to scroll past. A specific CTA tied to a clear reason converts better — for example, "This weekend only: [specific dish] is back on the menu."

A specific CTA gives a hesitant local a concrete, timely reason to visit instead of a vague invitation with no urgency.

The consideration window before someone visits

Most people follow a restaurant's content for a while before actually visiting. Staying consistently visible and appealing during that window is what makes you the obvious choice when they're deciding where to eat.

This isn't about pressuring followers to visit immediately. It's about remaining top of mind so you're the natural pick when the moment comes.

Addressing hesitations before the visit

Common hesitations — uncertainty about price point, wait times, whether it's kid-friendly — can be addressed directly in content, which removes friction before someone even decides to come in.

Content that pre-answers these questions makes the decision to visit easier and faster.

Action Steps — Before You Move On

- ☐ Rewrite your next promotional post to be specific and time-bound instead of a general invitation.
- ☐ Write one piece of content addressing a common hesitation (price, wait, kid-friendliness).
- ☐ Identify five engaged local followers who haven't visited and send a genuinely warm invite this week.

Systems & Consistency: Making It Sustainable

None of the previous strategies matter if whoever runs your content burns out during a busy service season. This module is about building a rhythm that survives dinner rushes, staffing changes, and everything else running a restaurant involves.

Batching around your service schedule

Batch content during slower shifts or a weekly planning moment, so you have a bank of posts ready before a busy weekend or event hits.

A simple content calendar tied to your specials and events removes most of the daily "what do we post" scramble during a rush.

The minimum viable weekly rhythm for a busy kitchen

You don't need daily posting. A sustainable minimum — one craving post, one atmosphere moment, and one specific promotion weekly — done consistently for months beats an ambitious schedule that collapses during your busiest season.

Consistency across slow and peak seasons is what actually builds a loyal regular base, not short bursts during a big push.

Reassessing after each season

After each busy season, revisit which content and promotions actually drove walk-ins versus what just felt active. Adjust based on what actually worked.

This is a scheduled seasonal checkpoint, not a reaction to any single slow night.

Action Steps — Before You Move On

- ☐ Define your minimum viable weekly content rhythm as a specific, realistic number.
- ☐ Block time during a slower shift to batch content for the following week.
- ☐ Set a recurring seasonal reminder to review which content and promotions actually drove walk-ins.
